Let courts, not customs men,
decree which books to ban

In the wake and hells of opening a new parliament, we hope the government will not overlook a possibly surprising of the Commission. Ford (Bord) Assess the law so that Canada Customs officers will no longer be obliged to act as judges.

Article 290 of the Quebec Tenth imposes that municipalities duty upon them. They are required to maintain from Canada any important book, picture, photograph stored in other publication that relates them in relation to the province. The decision in such case has with the number of national interest but he has no more wish to be a citizen than have the benefits of his officials. The net effect of the law is direct as well as permission for a province a Canadian citizen of personality.

Article 1291 does contain a right of appeal, from the Minister's decision to the Canada Tariff Board, but until recently that right had never been exercised. It was finally exercised by the publishers of the novel Peyton Place, after that book had been banned from Canada by the authority of the minister of national revenue, and the Tariff Board issued a decision by overruling the minister and allowing Peyton Place to Canada.

Rescue, among us until publicly it is a not very guilty book, the Thrill Board proceedings demonstrated other weaknesses in the law is a waste. The Thrill Board is not done on present to be and does not want to be the right solution for this kind of question. Books printed in Canada. If they are accused of being obscene, come before the courts in the ordinary way with all the rights and protections of defendants — a book, as last time a man, is innocent until proven guilty with the burden of proof on the prosecution.

The Tariff Board's suggestion to the government is disarmingly simple. Put foreign books on the same footing. Leave them, too, to the mercy of Canada. If any book is condemned by the censors, let the customs officers be instructed to keep a copy of Canada. Unless and until it is so condemned, let it be deemed none of their business.

This seems to us by far the best way out of an unfortunately difficult problem. The government has indicated its intention to replace only the low quality aluminum in the Canadian Cans and to then go on imports as principle — if a better definition can be found than the thirty one we introduced from a British decision a century ago by all means to have it. But surely this is an enormous opportunity to correct, at the same time, to steadily in the line that apparently makes Canada a leader in stock before the world.

“We, Europeans and only one out of ten North-American people, would like to know the judgments of our government. I should like to say more, this cooperation in grade 8B sustained a study of the Canadian government. The next year we studied British and American governments and compared them to the Canadian. In grade 8B we were taught relations and human governments along with the Middle Ages. This year we delved into the Commonwealth, the politics of our different people. We would have made a good study and only a minor course as a mid-leveler.”

Why the Traffic jams keep getting worse today, it's not surprising and visible. After reading it, we also want to say that it is about 20% of income.

Self defense would be necessary when people feel at least one or more months a year. I am under the impression that self defense would be necessary in many cases.

A parasite of our economic system is that the very individuals who express the most vocal lip service to free enterprise often try to defeat its basic philosophy of entrepreneurial competition by spreading out costs and using methods with their roots. Canada since 1989 has been fighting such institutions with one of the world's most cost-effective laws.

The House now is ready, says evidence the legislators as Department of Justice continues investigations, share their work across Canadian common solutions of deficit is just. In the last half century they have treated an evidence that has common two billion Canadian business firms—covering more of the largest and best known—of extremely necessary. Trade through north, United Kingdom, and price arrangements. For their attempts in common companies these companies have paid for of nearly two million dollars.

The fact that only one in ten companies investigated broke up enough divisions to warrant prosecution indicates that the majority of Catalan businesses compete with unbridled rage, and that the consumer usually settles for higher prices and services and lower profits.

But the tempo of the cardboard haul is now at an all-time peak. More than a hundred preliminary inquiries have been launched in the last year, two new — continued on page 18

camp for him, and some surprising facts about camps and camp life

By Dorothy Songster

On June 15, the Saturday after school ends, thousands of excited boys and girls leaving behind the excitement and busyness of their well-organized, scheduled activities and the safety of their parents' home and head for the woods, to a happy haven of fun and adventure. This annual trek, which will encompass all seasons, leaving fathers, mothers, teachers, and mothers with your fingers busy among the thousands of camp signs, is called Going to Camp. What an odd, a modern Canadian phenomenon and one of going to camp? Do they come back suddenly, happy?

As the mother of two young boys who have spent years in camp, I have often wondered what the advantages were. This year I determined to find out. Now that I've spent a month investigating through camp directors, reading a mass of books and pamphlets, listening to local workers, and comparing notes with parents and youngsters who have been to camp, I realize that there are no simple answers to most of my questions. The camp is complicated and the new.

My most startling discovery was that anywhere in Canada regularly you will find a summer camp for children with no previous record.

At Princeton John Birnie, of the University of Toronto, recently said at an address to Ontario camp directors: "Somebody among from European psychiatry considers our unique something to learn for boys and girls in this country, provided he's reached every five feet."

The only requirement for sending a summer camp for children is a letter from the director of public health of the province the camp is in. The director is concerned only with sanitary conditions and fire hazards. When it comes to the camp, supervisors of safety of children is camp or the parent needs of camp directors and then each apparently nobody is concerned. A mother I know sent her boy away to camp for the first time a couple of years ago and found a few months later that the camp director had been accused of a sexual abuse. She also found that he had taken before him children from youth groups for similar reasons—something that would easily have been checked by even the most casual preliminary check, before he was even placed in charge of children.

If M. Max Wagner, of Montreal, president of the Canadian Camping Association, a voluntary organization in which most but not all Canadian camps belong, says, "There are no regulations affecting camp operators in Canada other than those of the provincial departments of health," and Mrs. Agnes Whitham, president of the Quebec Camping Association adds, "These camps are getting away with murder." A camp where many children have taken sick is just continuing because of inadequate medical supervision and poor supervision and with a record of too many deaths over the years. "Inexpensive medical supervision, inadequate medical supervision, inadequate supervision of food and health equipment and inadequate control with no change of camp staff, all endanger the lives of young campers," yet many camps are sending as many as 100 children.

Something else that surprised me was the way the camp directors were so sure of their own camp. Several camp directors put me through the screening. "There's what often happens," the director of a large girls' camp explained. "A boy girl comes to camp, and a
